Ask any individual this question and you will probably get a different answer, which in essence, is the key. There is much confusion surrounding Equality and diversity, as its true meaning is often obscured by myths and stories.

It is also treated as a very sensitive issue, with people being very wary of approaching the issue, in case they say something to offend. In this course, we will seek to remove the confusion surrounding the topic and make things a little clear.

Whilst people may have things in common, no 2 people are exactly the same, as there are so many influencing factors which affect the way in which we are.

Who is this training for?

This course is for any establishment within the UK. This course is aimed for all people, regardless of their background, occupation or religion. In today's modern-day society, everyone is different and unique, which is what makes it so vibrant and exciting. The definition of discrimination is the unjust or prejudicial treatment of different categories of people, especially on the grounds of race, age, or sex.

Discrimination occurs when an individual receives less favourable treatment than others in a similar circumstance based on the individual differences we identified earlier in this module. This could be on the grounds of age, class status, religion, sexual orientation and other perceived differences.
